Researchers at Virginia Tech are taking a new approach at controlling pig diarrhea caused by the bacterium, E. Coli.

They are feeding the organism to the sows during gestation, thereby developing more immunity in the sow. The sows are then able to pass this immunity to the baby pigs in her milk.

The conventional treatment is with drugs, but experience shows that resistance to drugs builds quite rapidly.

Dutch Treat is a sweet yellow pepper, a 1979 All American Bronze Medal Winner, and has some interesting characteristics. No question about when Dutch Treat is ready to eat. Before other pepper varieties are mature, its yellow fruits turn scarlet, and then deep red, growing sweeter and thicker fleshed as they ripen. There is no groping around in the foliage to find the fruits. Dutch Treat tips its fruit straight up and clusters them atop the plants, as many as 5 or 6 peppers 3 to 6 inches in length and shaped like dunce caps adorn each plant.

Dutch Treat is an ideal decorative vegetable for containers or interplanting with flowers. Its erect plants reach 12 to 15 inches in height and width at maturity. Because the fruit is exposed it may be helpful to grow this plant in a protected area near corn plants that will protect the fruit from afternoon sun.

Bred in Holland, Dutch Treat was developed as a multi-purpose vegetable. You can cross-cut the yellow or red fruit to add color, crunch, and vitamines to salads. Egg batter, dip and fry pieces into chili rellenos, stuff and bake split fruits, diced into cheese for spreads or pickled fruits whole or with mixed vegetables.

Dutch Treat will mature in about 70 days from setting of transplants.

Vitapro helps more cows drop bigger healthier calves more often.

Sometimes Mother Nature needs a little help.

That's what VITAPRO does. It provides the supplemental nutrients cattle need for high conception rates, shorter calving cycles, and heavier weaning weights.

VITAPRO is extra protein, phosphorous, sulfur, vitamins, minerals and energy, in a properly balanced, easily available, highly palatable form. Everything cattle need to make up for what Mother Nature leaves out of grass, grains, or roughage.

You'll see the difference it makes in your cattle. Even the timid ones. Because a licker-feeder full of VITAPRO supplies each animal as much as it needs to balance its ration. Without the work and waste of dry supplements.

have to be extended overseas.

While natural resources, labor, capital and just plain hard work have been key components in Virginia's growth over the past five decades, the desire for growth has been a prime component in the state's success. "Attitudes, laws, and customs of Virginians are conducive to prosperity," Gillis said. "With its excellent mix of mental and physical attributes, the state is destined to be on the top rung of America's economic ladder."

The Virginia Chamber's Economic Forecast concludes by noting that the state's highly productive workers will continue to be well compensated, with per capital income rising to more than $8,000 in 1979, a real increase of better than 4 percent.

"While Virginia is somewhat insulated against large swings in the nation's employment and output," Gillis summarizes, "it cannot be immune from inflation. Hopefully, Virginia will experience a substantial moderation of that evil in 1979. Even if a predicted business slow-down occurs, the state will see real growth in 1979."

The Virginia State Chamber of Commerce is a private, non-profit membership organization, representing almost 6,000 businesspeople across the state.
